a day with

Fiaz Elson

4th May 2019 - illustrated talks about her work, inspirations and working methods

Fiaz Elson is one of the UK's leading glass casting artists, and has an international reputation as both an artist and a teacher. Trained in design, Fiaz only made the transition to working with glass in 1998 when she did the highly regarded glass course at Staffordshire University. Since graduating in 2001 she has established herself as one of the most original glass artists. Gallery owners were quick to appreciate her work and she has an impressive list of exhibitions to her name in New York, Switzerland and in Britain. In 2004 she was one of the selected artists in the prestigious British Glass Biennale Exhibition in Stourbridge. From her work called 'Passion', a 30cm long sculpture shaped as a flat tear-shape with vibrant blood red and black the predominant colours, it was easy to see why her work has been variously described as "seductive, monumental and mysterious".
